The water question would soon have to be considered as the present supply of water in winter is not satisfactory. On this question expert opinion should be obtained.

The premier of Alberta should be especially reminded of his promise to donate money to wards the road to West Coleman.

Councillor MacDonald believed that an auditor was necessary and he moved that J. Ross be appointed auditor. This was seconded by S. Shone and carried unanimously. It was moved by Councillor James and seconded by Councillor Holmes that H. Gate be secretary-treas. pro tem. Carried.

The matter of remunerating the auditor was discussed but was finally left open.

It was moved by Councillor MacDonald and seconded by Councillor Holmes that Councillor Shone, Clark, and James be a committee to draw up scheme whereby all the civic officials could be combined in one officer and that the committee receive applications for same, and report in one week. The question of grading streets on the hill especially 4th St. and First ave. was discussed. The following committee was appointed to act as a Board of Works: Councillors James, Holmes, Morrison and MacDonald. This committee was to obtain an estimate of the cost of grading the above streets and avenue, and a bridge across Nez Perce Creek on Second St.

It was moved by Councillor James and seconded by Councillor Morrison that F. G. Graham be appointed Fire Chief. Councillor Shone stated that he was not against F. G. Graham but that he would like to see applications sent in for the position and where all have an equal chance. Mr. Shone then moved an amendment to this effect but found no seconder. The original motion was put and carried by the following vote.

Yea: Councillors James, Holmes, Morrison and MacDonald. Nays: Shone. Motion carried.

The question of remunerating the Fire Chief was left to the following committee: Councillors Shone, Clark and Morrison. This committee also was to draft duties of Fire Chief as well. AN OUTFIT FOR THE COLLEGE GIRL

CHILDREN'S HATS

MOST bewildering are all the new fancies for bonnets for the girls. Lace and lawn, flowers and ribbons—everywhere and always ribbon, in all sorts of quaint and dainty arrangements.

Pink satin ribbon, for instance, is used in one hat as tubing around the point where brim meets crown, and is then formed into tight, perky little bows at the side. Then there is a scarf effect in quilted two-inch ribbon, with the bows in front edged with lace. And still a third ribbon trimming is loosely knotted over the brim, with the end knots hanging a little over the edge of the hat.

But the hats themselves are as charming as their "fixings." One wide-spreading hat is of lightweight linen, sewed over a wire frame, with a high puffed crown and lined with sheer lawn that is edged all around with wide val lace. This lace edging forms an undercuff for the scalloped and embroidered linen above; and a huge bow of white taffeta ribbon, tied a little to the left side and almost covering the crown, completes a hat not too elaborate for a child's wear and yet very dressy indeed.

Quaint and grandmotherly, and yet very dainty, is a poke bonnet of frilled narrow lace, rows upon rows of it, sewed on lawn foundation and mounted over the wire frame. A wide scarf of white liberty silk ribbon takes up nearly all the space from edge—there is no brim-to crown, and fastens with a little puffed rosette over each ear, ending in long strings, which keep the bonnet on a realistic little head. A cluster of tiny white rosettes, with dark green foliage, is placed over the ribbon at the extreme left. The crown is lined with gathered China silk.

A much simpler hat is a dainty linen one in sunbat shape. This is made of heavy white linen, with crown and brim separate, and fastened by means of little pearl buttons. The edge of the brim is scalloped and button-holed in coarse mercerized cotton. A bandeau of linen over cardboard gives this hat a nice fit. The crown is very much puffed indeed, and spreads over nearly all the brim.

A delay in the midst of dainties will be the little girl who wears the lovely lace and ribbon hat trimmed with wild flowers. The drooping brim is made of a double ruffle of wide lace, the under one slightly longer than the upper. The high rounded crown is of sheer lawn over wire, covered with innumerable circular rows of lace edging. A white ribbon scarf, with a French bow in back, encircles the hat, and white and yellow daisies are placed over it in a wreath, ending only at the before-mentioned bow. The shape is really a Corday one, with the lace flounces giving the shade-hat effect.

There are many other hints for the mother who likes dainty millinery for her small daughter. Here, for instance, are bonnets of shirred lawn with lace insertion in alternate rows, and of net to a Paris authority, as follows: Violet, lavender, prune color and royal purple; scar, cats and tail, terra cotta, bronze, golden, tobacco and coffee brown; Russian, clover leaf, magnolia, and duck green; parrot, navy, royal, Wilhelmina, and Natter blue; silver, lavender, slate and mouse gray and black. The prominent mixtures will be black and gray, black and white and white and black, which is a very different thing.

The Coming Colors

THE colors which fashion decrees for the coming season are, according to a Paris authority, as follows: Violet, lavender, prune color and royal purple; scar, cats and tail, terra cotta, bronze, golden, tobacco and coffee brown; Russian, clover leaf, magnolia, and duck green; parrot, navy, royal, Wilhelmina, and Natter blue; silver, lavender, slate and mouse gray and black. The prominent mixtures will be black and gray, black and white and white and black, which is a very different thing.

Every color of the rainbow seems to be here, and yet how many, including reds, pinks and yellows, are omitted! In millinery there is less choice, the pronounced favorites being violet, lavender, royal purple, mauve, pheasant brown, royal and parrot blue and geranium and the various tones of gray. The woman who is doing her shopping for even as late as next spring may safely take her choice from these shades.

GOING to college? Here is an outfit that promises to send the young woman along an effective, modish and inexpensive way, fitting the requirements of day and evening and combining style with the ever-attractive factor of a home planning. The page just from Paris stands for practical adaptations of the best fall models, and, although designed for the young woman at school, gives a suggestion of an entire outfit for any woman who wishes to be well dressed.

Look at the striped one-piece dress in the corner. To be worn without a coat, it gives a valuable garment for warm fall days. Striped serge of a very fine twill is used. Chevron or, in fact, any smooth woolen material would be equally successful for this type of frock. It is built on simple, girlish lines. Black satin is combined with the material, forming the small revers at the front, the square collar for the back and the under portions of the sleeves, over which the serge is cleverly placed. Black satin buttons give a touch that Paris insists upon just now.

You will notice that the sleeves of serge are extensions of the bodice—the kimono idea in another guise. A belt of the striped material joins waist to skirt, and a broad band is used on the lower part of the skirt.

If a suit be your idea—and, after all, there must be opportunity to wear shirtwaists and blouses that must not be neglected—the next model stands out as a practical suggestion. Dark gray cheviot is the material, and the trimming is of bands of the material and black velvet. There is a hint of the Russian in the blouse and pelum, but the long revers are fastened at the front, and the edge below the waist line stands over to one side. A coat sleeve is used. Straps of the material are placed over velvet cuffs and collar. A leather belt gives a final trig air.

Every one should have a negligee for the hours between occasions. Make this of pale rose or blue flannel, and cut it on kimono lines, with a front fastening. The elbow sleeves are slashed on the outer seam and the collar, front and sleeves are embroidered in scallops with white. Just for variety place a round chemise of sheer lace above the line at the top. The circle of the silk with tasseled ends holds in the fullness at the waist line.

Vols or silk for afternoon affairs is shown in the next model. The open-mouthed weave of the blue vols is made over white silk or satin. Bands of dark blue silk or satin to match the fabric are used to outline the modified yoke line. They also are placed in strips on the bodice and skirt. A deep hem of silk edges the long tunic, while the under-slip is bordered with blue silk. The slightly gathered vol of the tunic in no way detracts from the slender line of the figure. A collarless glimpse of lace and net has full sleeves, and is separate. For this costume two or three changes can be quickly made.

Dotted net or tulle for the evening dress is made with no other addition than a lace collar and black satin girdle. Six horizontal tucks reaching to the knees form the comparatively straight band at the lower edge. The fullness of the upper part of the skirt is held in by these tucks. Half-length sleeves are edged with three tucks. A flower form of satin is placed at one side of the circle.

Stone gray broadcloth makes the long separate coat that can be forced into evening duty. Bands of black cloth edge the large rolling collar and the deep turned-back cuffs. Two enameled buttons fasten the coat at one side. Braid is used to emphasize the line of trimming.

Let us look at the hat. A bell-shaped felt, with a trimming of wings at the back held by a buckle, is the "cloche" at its best. The band around the crown and the facing are of black velvet.

For the broad hat a gray felt, with two flexible quills at the side, solves the problem, while black satin lined with silver and trimmed with a huge bow placed at the back will convince you of its practical style.

From this sextet any woman should be able to plan an outfit for the next six months. And if college days are in the golden past, each one of the collection holds suggestion for separate garments.

The Toilet Counter

ALl sorts of compact manure sets, in several of which all the rest of the set is contained in the buffer, which opens like a box.

A salve box equipped with a glass lining, which protects the box from discoloration by the salve.

Flexible bath brushes, consisting of fourteen linked brushes the size of a hand brush, each with a cord handle at either end.

Sticks of perfumed alum and glycerin sufficient to last a lifetime, to be used for cuts and burns after shaving—a toilet "kink" for men.

Powder sheets, not in a book, but in a package that is made self-depositing, so that pulling off one sheet brings the next into view.

Semi-transparent, greenest brilliance, in stick form, put up in an aluminum case.

Nay polio to crayon form, each crayon with its individual box.

Powder boxes of cardboard covered with glass, very attractive, and just ready for your favorite powder.

Loose Shoes

QUITE a bad as too tight shoes, against which we are always warned, are too loose ones; they cause corns and bunions and often produce flaking of the arches. The woman with the peculiarly shaped foot, who cannot get shoes exactly to fit her except when made to order, should get them a little too long rather than a little too wide; it is the lesser of two evils.

Autumn Shoes

THE advance styles for autumn shoes are in. Pay attention to them when buying your new ones, so that you are not fooled into buying an old-fashioned pair.

The most prominent leathers are dull calf and Russian, as well as patent leather in combination with cloth or kid tops.

For dress, patent kid ranges with velvet and satin capings—black, of course. Some corded and self-furred silks.

Black suede topplings are also worn, and a few brocade and self-furred silks, too, have patent leather vamps.

Heels are not as high as recently; 1½ inches is the highest for day wear. Vamps are nearly all short; if you get a longer vamp, you must get a lower heel also.

Toes are either round or wing; the latter is decidedly more favored by really fashionable women.

Toes are rather high and pointing, being longer in front than in back.

Latest French Fashion Notes

ALl roads in the fashionable world lead, at present, to the millinery. Despite the fact that the Parisienne is busy socially with races and afternoon entertainments, not to mention the round of pleasure in the evening, there is a time for little visits to the great designers.

Some of the smartest hats, of the smaller type, are the bloche models. These, you will remember, are reminiscent of the mushroom hat, with a decided bell shape. They are of felt, velvet and fur, and are trimmed with ribbon bows at the back or with plumes and wings.

Black viret facings on satin beaver are still good. Lewis is showing some beautiful chapeaux. The large low hats with enormous brims and oval crowns are favored by this house. One black velvet shape has a puffed crown of dull gold lace, with a fringe falling over the edge. Plumes are the principal trimming. Cereus plumes on dark blue velvet are used by this milliner, with just as great success as the color combination has met with in the realm of dress. Turbans and other small hats have very high crowns, some of which are oval.

Delays is exploiting wings as trimming. One of the most effective models is of white beaver with an oval crown, and tiny white wings like a butterfly at the side. Other wings are large, in pairs on turbans, standing in a high band around a crown, or gracefully drooping over the hair; the wings are here in emphatic favor.

For evening many of the hats have the under frill of lace or chiffon velvet.

As for coats, they seem to be lengthening, and the skirts are acquiring a fullness at the hem. Broad bands of material or shirring hold in the fullness and preserve the slender line.

Simplicity is the keynote for evening gowns. Fringe of gold or silver is much used on white satin.

Rechoff-David show a white tulle model trimmed with bands of black chiffon. A huge corset velvet knot holds the girle with its brilliant disk of color; the loose kimono sleeves are trimmed with three bands of chiffon lined with corset.

The touch of black still continues to be given to many costumes, and combinations of black and white are in evidence. The New Secours have many attractive black and white models. White moussette over black chamois lace; black chiffon over white satin, and black and white striped voile de sole over brilliant corset are some of the other charming exploitations of this color scheme.

Many of the most attractive handbags are immense in size, and are carried on long, thick cords with tassels. For late summer the handbags of fabric are still in vogue. Brocade anglaise over black satin or colored foundations is used for many of the afternoon bags.

Speaking of this English eclect embroidery gives but one more opportunity to sound its praise. It is used in combination with chiffon, velvets and velvets. Sometimes it is suggested under layers of net or tulle, and at other times it is heavily allied with material on the surface.

Black velvet is quite the material. Evening wraps, gowns, gowns and trimmings are under its sway. Hats of black velvet are faced with straw for the late summer.

PARTY DIVIDED

Sir Wilfrid Laurier received a splendid ovation at Montreal this week, which is a fitting ending to his triumphal tour of the West. His observations on the different policies of the Conservative party in each province show clearly the hopeless condition of that party. Unable to unite on a single policy of paramount importance they are hopelessly drifting to sea.

The Western section of the party favor a low tariff policy. The Eastern section favor a high protection tariff. who is to reconcile these two elements is a question that is plainly both difficult and painstaking. As yet the man of the hour has not appeared.

Sir Wilfrid has so written a popular and progressive policy on the statutes of the country, that he is certain to carry the country with him. To revert to a divided party would mean chaos and financial depression.

The Blairmore Enterprise on Sir E. P. Morris

The Blairmore Enterprise in an editorial paragraph states that as John Baptist prepared the way for Our Saviour so Sir Robert Bond made things easy for Sir Edward Morris, and gives as an instance the successful (?) settlement of the Hague controversy. We overlook the bit of blasphemy in the comparison—attributing it to a temporary aberration on the part of an admirer of "one of the greatest statesmen of the age." Enthusiasm will sometimes carry a man to the most insane lengths. As regards Sir Robert preparing the way, the only reply we can make is to laugh loud and long.

Any impartial reader who has observed the splendid executive ability shown by our brilliant Premier and the magnificent progress he has made during his short term in office, will look upon this statement of the Enterprise as a huge joke. The man who saddled the country with an unnecessary burden of $500,000 as a result of his gross stupidity "one of the greatest statesmen of the age!" It is to laugh!! It is to laugh!!!—Western Star, Newfoundland.
